THE immunity from all punishment en joyed by the mandarins of Szechuen for the riots and destruction of mission property recently in that province is already bearing fruit elsewhere. The British and American-Ministers, who appear between them to possess neither moral influence nor power of effective remonstrance at Peking, have been unable to do more than talk, and the Chinese officials are of course laughing at them with truncheon on the loft side, and also smacked his face. They ran away, and a short time aftertheir tongues in their cheek. Encouraged by the success of the raid on missions made at the instigntion of the late Vicerov of Szechien, the mandarins in other provinces. being all more or less imbued with hatred and contempt for the missionaries, are now avidly eager to carry on the crusade, and thus secure the final ejectment of the detested foreigner from the sacred soil of the Cerestial to have b on administered to the decessed by a No wonder, considering the Chinese Constable not identified, but the evidence apathy of Great Britain and the United regarding which is too uncertain to be reliable." morals have ruled steady at $5.90 and have States, that the mandarins should take heart and presume on what to them nature. ally appears to be pusillan mity. The mob are urged on to these acts of violence by the literati, and the officials scoretly encourage them by refraining from all interference. This outbreak at Pingyang is just another evidence of the fact so repeatedly insisted upon, that if missionaries do not receive effective protection they should not be silowed to reside in the interior. Many devices are resorted to for the preservation and protection of various kinds of game in the Highlands. Here is an extract from " Monntain, Moor, and Loch," an interesting guidebook to the new West Highland railway, just published by Sir J. Causton and Sons, which tells of one of these devices, which may not be generally known; - Ever since leaving Crianistich sometwelve miles back, we have been travelling through a country consecrated to sport, of which feet a significant illustration is to be seen in the little rattling squares of tinbung at intervals along the telegraph wires, and particularly at the opening of the glens. These are known as "grouse protectors," and are han, thus in order that their noise in the wind may warn the grouss of the existence of a danger. and prevent them burling themselves in full flight against the telegraph wires.

The wife of a London gun maker met with an upplessant adventure lately/ Accompanied by her bushind, she went into a shop near the Strand, and parlook of some stewed cols. Whilst in the middle of the meal, she experienced a choking sensation, a piece of the fish having lodged in her threat Mr. Churchill and others in the shop were greatly alarmed when they noticed the condition she was in, and prompt messures were taken for her relief. Fortunately these efforts were successful, and it was then discovered that the obstruction was caused by a flah-hook, contained in one of the pieces of sel she attempted to swallow, having lodged in her throat. Fortonately the book had not penetrated the throat to any great extent, or an operation might have been necessary. There is reason to believe that the book was swallowed by the eel a long time ego, and that the flesh bad grown over it to such an extent as to bide it from the cook who cut up the fieb.

Two elderly ladies, who for many years resided in I eeds, had a favourite cat, which was brought up by them from a kitten. One of the ladics dying in September last, the other shortly afterwards shut up her house at Leeds and came. to reside at Cowley, in Ecclesfield, about six miles from this town. A new kind of oreche has been discovered at Paris and denounced by a bitterly indignant. mother. The lady in question (says the Pall Mull Gazette) committed the indiscretion of returning from a ball three hours before she was due, and on reaching home she found three important members of her hous hold missingto wit, her infant, her housemaid, and her nurse. From the concierge she elicited the simple fact that the ladies in question had gone to the Moulin Rouge, and that the baby " had associated itself" to this little excursion, though, with deplorable indifference or else to husband its strength, it was fast asleep when it left the maternal roof. Than the chase was up, and Madome had soon reached the dionin Rouge where she ran to ground the maid, the nurse, and a casual military friend, but there was no vision of the profligate babe. The servants at once assumed the aggreswww. "Would Midame kindly not mar the barmless gaiety of the evening. The infant was in a safe place and in excellent keeping." That was sufficient; the nurse in tears and terror at once consented to show the place of excellent keeping. This was a small public-house close to the Moulin Rongs. and here the child was found sleeping in a cot, but not slone. There were eight other children. all of the upper classes, in the same room and all described by their faithful honnes, who were at the said Moulin Rouge. The proprietor confessed that he received if. 50s for every child per night, and that he kept the whole year round an infunis' hotel of this nature, which he obristened "Au Rendervous des Bébés." A correspondent writes to the Spectator :-

A friend thinks I ought to add to the collection of dog-stories appearing in the Speciator, one which is within my own knowledge, and may appear deserving of publication. My mole, a well-known chairman of the Bench of Magietrates in a western county, had a tenant on his estates who occupied a farm not far from the river Severn. The farmer possessed a favourite dog, who slept at the foot of his bad every night. When a brother emigrated to Causda, the farmer gave him the dog as a travelling companion. In the con se of time the news arrived that the emigrant and his family, together with the dog, had safely reached their destination-a farm in the interior of anada some days' journey from the port where they landed. At a later | Gap Rock ........ date the brother in Canada wrote to his family in lengtand saying that the dog bad disappeared. Some time afterwards the dog came back to the farm of his old master, about three miles from Gloncester, and though at first t sould hardly be believed that he was returned from Canada, yet he soon astablished his identity by taking his old place at the foot of his mester's bed at night. Inquiries were made, and the dog's course was traced backwards to the river Severn, thence to Bristol, and thence to a port in Canada. It appeared that, after running card. After striving at the Bristol basin, he eupd out a local vessel trading up and down the lear Bevern (locally called a "trow"), and capalerred himself to her deck. When he ied the neighbourhood of Gloucester, the dog have jumped into the Severn and reached thore nearest to his old home. I can youth the troth of this story, from information ived from my relation on the spot shortly the occurrence took place. I know the m well, and the farmer who occupied it.
